LAST OF ONCE FAMOUS BIG THREE RANCH SOLD TO ANGELENO FOR $60,000

Thirty Acres of Bearing Oranges Sold by E. F. VanLoven and Jas. Barnhill to R. T. Roy, who will Make it His Home; a Fine Property.

Rialto, July 2nd.—(Staff correspondence of The Sun, California.)—The largest real estate deal made in this vicinity for some months was completed to-day in the sale of the last tract of the once-famous Big Three ranch in North Rialto 30 acres passing to the ownership of R. T. Roy of Los Angeles. The deal was made through the agency of Paddock and Tibbot.

Mr. Roy buys the property for a home place and proposes to make immediate improvements and remove his family here.

The price paid for the property is an even $60,000 which includes the 30 acres of full bearing orange groves, 8 to 14 years old, set principally to navels, but also having some St. Michaels, Sweets and Valencids. Also an eight room ranch house and all personal property including teams of both horses and mules and farm implements. Thirty shares of stock of the Lytle Creek Water and Improvement company go with the place.

The sellers are E. F. VanLoven, brother of Messrs. VanLoven Bros., Moscow, and James Barnhill of Colton, who receive in payment stock valued at $60,000 in a Los Angeles water company which pays a liberal dividend annually.

The Big Three ranch which consisted of 211 acres was purchased by Messrs. VanLoven and Barnhill five years ago for $60,000. They have since then sold it off in smaller subdivisions and the tract has brought them about $200,000 beside having taken a number of very profitable crops off the tract which is easily one of the finest in the valley. For them it has been a very profitable investment.

The tract lies in what has repeatedly been proven to be a frostless district, the orchards there having withstood repeated cold snaps in past years.

A SPECIAL DRAINAGE CAM

The Napanee Branch of the Department of Agriculture, giving a special drainage course to Lennox and Addington in co-operation with the Physic Department of the Ontario Agricultural College. Mr. G. B. Curran, representative, was in Napanee last week and arranged with P. Day to send a special drain tile to Napanee. The service drainage expert are free to the county, with the exception the farmer must keep the while doing his work, and proportionate share of the rail amounting to less than $1.00 turn for this, the farmer has surveyed, and is supplied with his fields showing location, depth, grade of ditch bottom tile to use, outlet is staked, and tails are explained so that can lay the tile correctly. Mr. G. B. Curran, superior work when tile laying is complete give any further assistance.

A most successful drainage demonstration was held Monday July 8th., at the home of Mr. Paul, Ernestown, by Mr. of the Physics Department Guelph, and Mr. G. B. Curran were in attendance, and farmers have applied for drainage. More drainage demonstrations will be held in the county.

The wet spring we had emphasizes the need of tile. Any farmer who had crop out last spring should have surveyed and a drainage map. The work of tiling need not be done the present season, but can be put in as time allows the best time to do drain.

Applications for surveys low-lying lands should be made as early as convenient to Mr. Curran, Department of Agriculture, Napanee.

the Test.

A solicitor was defending a case where a fruit-broker brought an action for the recovery of twenty pounds, the price paid for a consignment of figs which the plaintiff declared to be unfit for human food. The defence alleged that although moderately discolored by salt water, as the plaintiff knew when he bought them, the figs were perfectly wholesome. The figs were in court.

The plaintiff, a coster, who conducted his own case, was skillfully cross-examined. The trial was obviously going against him, and once or twice he retorted so hotly that the judge threatened to commit him for contempt.

At length the coster grew desperate, and turning to the opposing counsel, hoarse and perspiring, he said:

"Look here, guv'nor; you say them figs are good to eat, and I say they ain't. That's all there is between us, ain't it? Now, if you'll eat two of them figs and you ain't ill immediately afterwards, I'll lose my case."

The judge at once saw the propriety of this suggestion, and asked the lawyer what he proposed to do.

"Your honor is trying the case, not I," was the reply.

"No, no! The offer is made to you," said the judge.

A hurried consultation took place. Counsel suggested that it was the solicitor's duty to submit to the experiment. The solicitor refused. The broker himself was then asked if he would risk it.

"What will happen to me if I don't?" said he.

"You'll lose the case," replied both his legal advisers.

"Then," said he, hurriedly, "lose the case, lose the case!"

And so he did.

Royal Exiles' Home Sold.

The Wood Norton and Bishampton estates of the Duc d'Orleans have been disposed of, the purchaser being Sir Charles Swinfen Eady, better known as Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady. The Duc d'Orleans is the head of the Bourbon-Orleans family, and claimant to the throne of France. The late Duc d'Aumale purchased the Wood Norton estate from the late Mr. Edward Holland, the last Liberal M.P. for the borough of Evesham, when the Orleans princes were first expelled from France. On the death of the Duc d'Aumale in 1897 the estates descended to the present Duc d'Orleans, whose father, the Comte de Paris, had predeceased his uncle, the Duc d'Aumale. Wood Norton was in the public eye as recently as October, 1910, when the fine mansion became the temporary home of King Manuel and Queen Amelie of Portugal, on their exile from their country.

Household Hints.

If cockroaches reappear after you have once exterminated them send a package of insect powder to your next door neighbor.

In case of fire in your house retain your presence of mind and let your fire insurance policy be the first thing you carry out.

There are preparation that will kill the odor of tobacco smoke in your parlors, but as a rule they smell worse than the tobacco smoke.

Never give a house party when painters and decorators are at work in the house.

The only sure way to keep the children from hearing you swear is to cut out the swearing entirely.

Never build a spite fence. It doesn't deaden the sound of your neighbor's piano in the slightest degree.

Watertown, N. The loss, it is estimated, will be approximately $500,000. Nolives were loss, nor were there any serious casualties, so far as could be learned to-night. The fire started at 1 o'clock Monday and burned eight hours. At 8.30 to-night it had practi- cally extinguished. The blaze spread with amazing rapidity, fanned by a strong wind. The hotels and cottages were filled with summer guests, many of whom had to vacate so hurriedly that they lost practically all their be- longings. Hotel guests and cottagers did their best to fight the flames, but without a department organization or suitable apparatus their efforts were of little use.

Some statistics of "the growing times" in Canada, to which the new Government will possibly "view with alarm, rather than point with pride," are contained in the annual report of the Inland Revenue Department showing a rapid increase in the consumption of liquor and tobacco in the Dominion during the last fiscal year. The consumption of spirits last year jumped to 1,030 gallons per head as compared with 859 gallons per head for the preceding year. Canadians drank 859 gallons of beer per head last year as compared with 5434 gallons per head in 1910-11, and .114 of a gallon of wineas compared with .108 of a gallon for the preceding year. The tobacco consumption last year was 3,011 lbs. per head. Cigarette smokers are evidently increasing rapidly in numbers, and smoking more per capita of the "coffin nails." The total number of cigarettes entered for consumption last year was 782,663,841, an increase of a little over 196 millions, as compared with the preceding fiscal year. Cigar smokers also kept their index finger pointing towards "National prosperity." The number of cigars entered for consumption was 252,718,242, an increase of 25,000,000 over the preceding twelve months.

Linked by Fate

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

"And now, dearest, touching the future—"

He started at his own words. Future! Why, he had destroyed the future that belonged to her, had given away his birthright, the title, the wealth that should belong to her as his wife! It had been the act of a madman, but—the act had been accomplished, and could not be undone. She nestled against him and laughed.

"I am too happy in the present to think of the future," she said in a low voice.

"You—you don't mind being the wife of—a poor man, a man of no account?" he faltered.

She looked at him with surprise. "You forget the gold—Vane!" she said.

The tone of her "Vane" thrilled him.

"Ah, yes, of course!" he responded, with relief. "Yes; yes! I'd forgotten the gold. No wonder, with such a treasure in my arms! We'll go to England, form a company—" He stopped and frowned. How could he go to England, he who had exiled himself from civilization, who was dead to the world, his world. "You—you wouldn't like to stay here?" he suggested, scarcely knowing what to say.

"Anywhere—with you!" she murmured.

Suddenly athwart this dream of happiness came a voice calling, "Decima—Miss Wood!"

Nina started. "Lord Sutcombe!" she whispered almost guiltily.

"Ah, poor Lord Sutcombe!" murmured Vane, gravely. "Yes, I can pity him, Nina! To love you—and lose you! Don't I know what that means!"

Sutcombe came upon them hurriedly and stopped short, looking from one to the other, the color coming and going in his face. Vane made a dash at the revelation.

"Lord Sutcombe—Nina—Miss Wood—we have met—she is my wife!"

Sutcombe started; then he remembered the paper and the ring he had seen Nina weeping over, and realized the truth—and his own absolute, irrevocable loss. He stood for a moment or two quite silent, then he came forward and held out his hand.

"I—I congratulate you," he said, simply, and not even Vane could appreciate the effort, the words, the tone, cost him; but perhaps Nina could.

She laid her hand on his arm and looked up at him through a mist of tears.

"We—we—ove—our happiness to you," she whispered. "But for you I should not have come back to the island—"

Sutcombe patted her hand in silence for a moment, then he said:

"We must go back to my sister; she is anxious."

was lessened by the fact that the poor soul, the poor deaf and dumb woman, who was so devoted to him, had given her life to save mine. It was some kind of a return, acknowledgment of her heroism. I could make the master she loved rich and happy. You see? You think I was mad; but—I hadn't found my wife again," and he colored and looked round. "She is my wife, Lord Sutcombe. Tell her so!"

Sutcombe nodded gravely. "Yes," he said, "I am a barrister, though I've never practiced; and, strangely enough, while I was reading for the bar, I studied the marriage laws. The marriage was legal!"

"Thank you!" said Vane, with his eyes on Nina's face. She rose, and without a word Vivienne and she left the saloon. At the door she paused for an instant and looked at Vane. He had started to his feet, but, before the look in her eyes, he sank down again.

"She is not satisfied," he said, almost inaudibly, as the door closed on them.

Sutcombe shook his head. "It is only natural. You must be married in due form. Though, mind, this one is legal and absolutely valid!"

"But—but—there is another matter," continued Sutcombe. "Do you mind telling me again about the accident, the fire? It is a painful subject—but I have a reason for asking."

Vane repeated the account of that awful scene in the Wizard's or Witch's Room, and Sutcombe stopped him now and again to ask for some detail; then he said, very gravely:

"And you call it an accident?"

"Certainly!" responded Vane, with surprise. "The poor woman upset the stove, furnace, whatever you call it, and the burning spirit ran over the floor and caught."—He shuddered.

"The fire? Yes, that was an accident," said Sutcombe, still more gravely, his face pale, his eyes fixed earnestly on Vane. "But the fumes which nearly suffocated you? The door was locked—"

"It locked with a spring."

"The ropes of the ventilator gave way in your hands. Your cousin, Mr. Julian Shore, did not return—"

"Good God! What is it you are suggesting?" cried Vane, white to the lips, not only at the suggestion, but at his own vague sense that it might be true.

"Murder," replied Sutcombe.

Vane fell back and regarded him with horror-stricken eyes.

"Murder! Julian—Julian plot, plan my death! Oh, you don't know him! He is incapable of—" The sweat stood thickly on his brow.

Sutcombe looked at him steadily.

"You had never met your cousin before that day at the lawyer's;

The tears came to her eyes as she put up her hand and, with the familiar gesture not necessary for her to thing.

island—

Sutcombe patted her hand in silence for a moment, then he said:

"We must go back to my sister; she is anxious."

"Yes, let us go," said Vane.

Sutcombe would have preceded them, but Nina walked resolutely by his side; and so, all together, they came to Vivienne in the saloon. Nina flew to her and hid her face on her bosom, and Vivienne stared over her at the tall, rough-looking man, whose grave face had already the glow of his new found happiness in it.

"Vivienne—oh, Vane, I can't tell her! You!" she broke down.

Vane came forward.

"It is soon told," he said, gently.

"This lady to whom you and your brother have been so good—God bless you for it!—and I am husband and wife. We were married on this island a long time ago. My name, her name, is Mannering. I am Vane Mannering—"

He stopped, aghast, at the slip of the tongue, and was more aghast still when he saw the brother and sister exchange glances. He was glad that Nina had—like a good housewife—turned to the fire to see after the supper.

"Vane Mannering!" exclaimed Sutcombe. "Are you related to the Lesborough family? There was a Vane Mannering—the last earl, who perished in a fire at Lesborough Court—"

Vane signed to him warningly, and Sutcombe, embarrassed and speechless, stopped and stared at him. Vivienne made a show of helping Nina, and presently Nina shyly invited them to supper. They sat down, and Vane told the Sutcombes of the wreck, and the story of the marriage, Nina sitting near him with bent head and face that grew hot and pale by turns; and the Sutcombes listened with an amazement which grew still more intense when Vane abruptly said, as if he had suddenly arrived at a decision:

"And now for something else. Just now you asked me if I were connected with the Lesboroughs. I am. I am the man who was supposed to have been killed by the fire at the Court!"

"Supposed! Then—then you are Lord Lesborough!" exclaimed Sutcombe.

Vane stretched out his hand and got Nina's and held it tightly, and looked tenderly and reassuringly into her startled eyes.

"Yes," he admitted gravely. "It is a strange business. Listen!"

Amidst their breathless silence he told them the story of the accident, the sacrifice he had made for Julian.

"What was the use of the title, the estate, to me?" he said, simply. "I had lost Nina forever, as I thought; for even if she were alive, I thought she had risked death rather than remain alive with me. Life was over for me; such a life as that which I should have had to lead was impossible. And Julian would make a ten thousand times better Lord of Lesborough—it was only pushing the clock on a little, I thought! I should never marry—even if I had been free to do so, for, you see, I loved my wife here, wife or no wife. And so I disappeared that Julian Shore might reign in my stead! It wasn't much of a sacrifice; and it

He was incapable of—The sweat stood thickly on his brow.

Sutcombe looked at him steadily.

"You had never met your cousin before that day at the lawyer's; knew nothing about him," he said. "I know more than you!"

"You!" said Vane.

"Yes; because I have not come under the spell of his presence, that peculiar charm of which you tell us. I, unbiassed, untrammelled by the influence of his personality, can view his actions with a clear judgment. Wait! Think how much he had to gain by your death! A peerage, the estate, the woman he loved!"

"But—but," stammered Vane, eagerly, "I was not in their way! She did not care—I did not care for her. She knew it!"

Sutcombe smiled grimly. "She had cared for you; I am not so sure, from all you tell me, that she did not still care. At any rate, he thought so. You were terribly in his way, Lesborough, and he tried to remove you! Why did that poor woman come back to that infernal room, and by the other door? She suspected her master, as I suspect, and she came to save you from death and him from—murder!"

Vane sprang to his feet.

"My God!" he cried, "I can't, I won't believe it! I dare not! Julian, my own flesh and blood!"

"More kith than kind!" murmured Sutcombe. "Heaven grant that you may be right and I wrong. But your duty is clear. You must go to England and discover the truth for yourself. Go secretly, concealing your identity—"

"I will!" said Vane, resolutely. "And I'll prove you're wrong! Yes, I'll prove it to your satisfaction. Julian try to—murder me!" He laughed, but the laugh had a note of dread and doubt in it.

They sat and talked for some time; then Vane said he must go.

"I can't leave the boat; I'm not certain of the tide," he said. "I'll come around to-morrow, and we'll talk it over. Of course, not a word to the ladies!"

They shook hands and parted, but neither slept. Vane lay awake looking up at the stars and thinking of Nina, and Sutcombe paced the saloon and carried on the fight with his disappointment and loss.

Going to the spring quite early the next morning, he was surprised to find Vivienne seated on the beach a little way from the ladies' hut. She beckoned to him, and when he came within hearing held up her finger warningly.

"Hush!" she whispered. "She is asleep. She has been awake all the night, but has just fallen off. We have been talking; she has been telling me everything, and I have been thinking. Sutcombe—she paused and bit her lip—"you are sure the marriage was quite legal?"

"Quite," he said, gravely, and looking away from her.

"Then bend down; I—I want to whisper, Sutcombe."

With her face against his, she whispered something in his ear. He started and drew a long breath, then nodded assentingly.

"Yes!" he said, in a low voice. "We will do it. It—it is a clever idea of yours, Vivienne. How did you come to think of it?"

"I am a woman, dear!" she said. "But you will have to be quick—there is no time to lose."

"I will manage my part, if you will do yours," he said, and he laid his hand on her shoulder. "To see her

"Yes, my lord. He is in the library with Mr. Tressider."

Julian nodded. "You can go. I don't want anything more, Prance.
Tell Dodson to have a carriage ready
—a close carriage—at eleven."

"Yes, my lord," said Prance, in the same low tone.

When he had left the room Julian turned to the letters again, and suddenly the gloom in his eyes gave place to eagerness. He had found a letter that interested him. He tore it open and read it, with a red spot on his hollow cheeks:

"Do not come to see me. I am not well enough to see any one. I will write when I am stronger."

"JUDITH."

He twisted the note in his nervous fingers, staring reflectively at the opposite wall meanwhile; then he tore the note into small fragments, and threw them on the fire. For some minutes afterward he sat, his eyes fixed on vacancy; then, with a start,
he rose and went into the library.
The steward and the lawyer were seated at the table, with some account books and papers before them.
Both men were in mourning. They had been talking about the new earl.

"Just the same, Mr. Tressider," Holland had said. "He seems like a man in a dream, and half dazed and bewildered, as if he could not get over the shock of—that night."

"Well, it's not so very long ago," commented Mr. Tressider, with a grunt.

"Quite so, quite so, Mr. Tressider!
I am not saying that it's unreasonable; but, well, after all, he has the title and the estates; and, if I may say so, his lordship doesn't strike me as the kind of man to be so overwhelmed as to lose sight of the advantages which his late lordship's death have bestowed on him."

"No," said Mr. Tressider. "I should not have credited Mr. Julian —pardon! I can never remember to give him his title!—his lordship—the man to forget that he is now the possessor of the title and estates. He doesn't sleep, you say?"

"Fenton told me yesterday that very often his lordship's bed had not been slept in, and that he hears him pacing up and down his room the larily happy, Mr. Tressider," remarked Holland.

The old lawyer grunted. "Seems as if there was a curse on the place—and the race," he said.

Julian went into the hall, and a footman brought his hat and overcoat. But when he had got them on Julian stood looking round him vaguely. It was down those stairs Judith Orme had come with white face and horror-stricken eyes the night—

"The carriage, my lord," said Prance.

Attended by a couple of footmen,
Julian got in; but as the carriage turned the corner of the lawn he pulled the cord; and as the horses came to a stop, got out and slowly, with bent head, went round to where the masons were at work bricking up the Wizard's Room. He stood and gazed at them for some minutes, then he re-entered the carriage and it drove on.

Just as it was passing through the lodge gates, with the lodge keeper's wife curtsying obsequiously, an open carriage entered. It pulled up, and Julian, looking from his window, saw Lord and Lady Fanworthy.

His thin face drew into a scowl for a moment, then he forced it into a smile, and, stopping the brougham, he alighted.

"How do you do?" he said, suavely. "Were you going up to the Court? I'll turn back."

"No, no! Don't Lesborough," said Lord Fanworthy. "I was only coming to ask you if you'd made up your mind about the hounds. Poor Vane, you know, was very interested in them—"

Julian stood beside the carriage, with his hat in his hands, "like a foreigner," as Lady Fanworthy would have said.

"I'm considering the matter," he said. "You are sure you won't let me turn back?"

He addressed Lord Fanworthy, but he was conscious of her ladyship's notoriously keen eyes. They seemed to pierce his brain.

"No; no, thanks."

Julian waved his hat and backed towards his brougham; but Lady Fanworthy's voice arrested him.

"Oh, I wanted to ask you—you won't think me guilty of vulgar curiosity, Mr.—Lord Lesborough—"

and Nina took it gratefully. After that she worked until the last mending bags were finished, and, with an unconscious relief, went towards the door. As she did so she looked a little fearfully, and yet a stfully; but there was no light. Nor was there any one in the room; and, putting the bags aside, she went towards the door. She reached it, she looked and to her surprise saw a figure in the offing. It was the figure she remembered that it was appointed for its removal. She was gazing at it when she was startled by discovering that it was from the island, instead of towards it. She ran down to the cove where one of the boats had been anchored, more than startled to find it disappeared. What could she have seen at the receding of a moment or two, then on the beach, calling for Vivienne?

It did not appear, but a figure came swiftly from the door. It was Vane. She stopped, panting, looked from him to the door.

"What's the matter? You were afraid?" he said. She responded, anxiously, "I was." "I was," said the Lady Vivienne. "I was," said the Lord Sutcombe. "I was," said the Ariel sail from the island!"

"He looked at his hand at it. Then he looked at his expression in his eyes, joy." "This in the saloon," he said, "perhaps it is not."

"The paper—it was folded in a knot—and, opening it, it was a plot! And mine alone. It was mine while we were talking."

"We have gone for a fortnight—when we will return to see if you are still Lord Lesborough has his eyes may both decide to rest of your honeymoon. If we do not find you, we will go to England and wait for you at Everleigh Court. And as long as I live, dear, I will wait for you."

"VIVIANNE!" he said, in a low voice—"let us alone! Nina, and the next moment his face round her and her face his breast."

"A month later, the figure was stealing faintly through the door of the breakfast room at the black garbed figure, as he sat at the table, looking distastefully at the figure set out for him. In his hand of black serge his thin face thinner than of old, and graceful. His face was pale, looked almost as bloodless as hands that broke the crust on his plate. Beside it, a post-bag, and every now and then a letter, opened it listlessly, then dropped it on the table. He gave you some fresh tea, asked Prance, in a subdued voice, all the voices at the table become subdued of late, fact, the fatal accident killed the late Earl. "Yes, thanks," replied Mr. Holland here?"

very often his lordship's bed had not been slept in, and that he hears him pacing up and down his room the whole night through."

The old lawyer shrugged his shoulders. "Well! I shouldn't have credited Mr. Julian—tut, tut, I mean Lord Lesborough—with so much sensibility. But, there, Mr. Holland, the longer I live the more I am convinced that there is one subject you can never learn—your fellow men!"

"Just so!" assented Holland. "Now I should have said that Mr. Julian—there! I've caught it from you, Mr. Tressider!—would have got over his poor cousin's death in less than a month; and yet, you see, it preys upon him and haunts him as if it happened only yesterday. And talking of haunting, the whole house seems as if it were under a ban. Mrs. Field tells me that she can scarcely persuade a servant to stay, and that they who do consent to remain won't go near the ruins of the Wizard's Room—Hush! Here he is!"

They rose and bowed as Julian entered. He went to the table, and, sinking into a chair, looked not at them, but between them.

"You wanted to see me?" he said to Mr. Tressider.

The old lawyer nodded. "Yes, Mr. Julian—ahem—Lord Lesborough, I want you, please, to sign some papers."

"Is—is everything done—complete?" asked Julian, his white hands fidgeting with a paper-knife.

"Er—well, not quite complete," replied Mr. Tressider. "There have been difficulties in the way, of which the greatest is the difficulty in proving the death"—his voice dropped—"of the late Earl."

Julian turned his dark, sombre eyes upon him.

"What difficulty can there be?" he asked, in a toneless voice. "He—my poor cousin—was in the room; and though the remains were unrecognizable, his coat was identified."

"Quite so, quite so, Mr.—Lord Lesborough," said Mr. Tressider, "but the Court needs rather more solid proof of death than that. At present, at any rate. Later, later they may accept it. Meanwhile, of course, as the next in succession, you will administer the estate. I shall make another application, which, if successful, will place your title beyond dispute. Will you sign this, and this, please?"

Julian drew the papers towards him and signed in his neat hand, "Lesborough," then he glanced at Mr. Holland.

"Do you want me? I am going for a drive."

"No, Mr.—Lord Lesborough. There is a lease or two, but they can wait; there is no hurry."

Julian rose slowly, with the heaviness, the slowness of a man of twice his weight.

"You are having the Wizard's Room bricked up, as I ordered?" he said, with his hand on the door.

"Yes, Lord Lesborough. The men are working steadily at it."

Julian nodded, held the door for a moment or two, then went out. The two men exchanged glances.

"Queer," said Mr. Tressider, pursing his lips.

"He is always like that—like a man in a dream!" said Mr. Holland, with a shake of the head.

Mr. Tressider shrugged his shoulders. "It is to be hoped that he will wake up," he said, resentfully, "or it will be a bad thing for Lesborough. Ah, poor Vane Mannering! He was the man!"

"And yet he didn't seem particu-

"Oh, I wanted to ask you—you won't think me guilty of vulgar curiosity, Mr.—Lord Lesborough—" It was strange that she should share Mr. Tressider's difficulty in addressing his lordship by his title—"but have you heard anything of that strange servant of yours, Deborah? The woman who disappeared the night—the night—"

Julian lifted his pale face, his dark eyes veiled by their heavy lids.

"Deborah?" he said.

"Yes; you know she left the Court the day of the—the accident," said the terrible old lady.

"I know," replied Julian. "Oh, yes! She went to attend the sick-bed of a sister. I expect her back every day. So good of you to ask for her! Are you sure you won't let me turn back with you?"

"Quite sure!" said her ladyship, as sweetly.

As the Fanworthy carriage turned Lord Fanworthy remonstrated with her ladyship.

"Pon my soul, don't you know! Rather unfeeling, eh, dear? What on earth made you drag up that awful business?"

Lady Fanworthy smiled for a moment, then became suddenly grave.

"My dear, I did it with an object. I want to find that deaf and dumb woman."

"Want to find her! Good heavens! What for?"

"Simple curiosity. I liked the woman," said Lady Fanworthy, after a pause.

CHAPTER XXV.

One evening Sutcombe came home—he had been down to the Mornus—just in time to dress for dinner; and Vivienne, hearing his footsteps, called him into the dining-room to look at the floral decorations.

"Aren't they pretty Sutcombe?" she said, in the softened tones which come so naturally to most women when they are speaking of flowers.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE.

Do not sap the springs of life by neglect of the human mechanism, by allowing the accumulation of poisons in the system. An imitation of Nature's method of restoring waste of tissue and impoverishment of the blood and nervous strength is to take an alternative glyceric extract (without alcohol) of Golden Seal and Oregon grape root, Stone and Mandrake root with Cherrybark. Over 40 years ago Dr. Pierce gave to the public this remedy, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He found it would help the blood in taking up the proper elements from food, help the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons from the blood and vitalizing the whole system as well as allaying and soothing a cough.

No one ever takes cold unless constipated, or exhausted, and having what we call mal-nutrition, which is attended with impoverished blood and exhaustion of nerve force. The "Discovery" is an all-round tonic which restores tone to the blood, nerves and heart by imitating Nature's methods of restoring waste of tissue, and feeding the nerves, heart and lungs on rich red blood.

MRS. DORN.

"I suffered from pain under my right shoulder blade also a very severe cough," writes MRS. W. DORN, of New Brookland, S. C., to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. "Had four different doctors and none did me any good. Some said I had consumption, others said I would have to have an operation. I was bedridden, unable to sit up for six months—and was nothing but a live skeleton. You advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. When I had taken one bottle of the 'Discovery' I could sit up for an hour at a time, and when I had taken three bottles I could do my cooking and tend to the children. I took fourteen bottles in all and was then in good health. My weight is now 167 pounds.

FRIBBLES OF FASHION.

A Pocket Substitute That Is Finding Considerable Favor.

The newest substitute for a pocket or bag is a huge muff of black velvet furnished with receptacles for all the ordinary paraphernalia which a woman carries with her when she goes out of doors.

New hand bags show the continued use of fabrics in preference to leather.

A good many of the blouses have collars, but low ones. They seem to be made for the woman with the short.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Regina Leader—The Greater Regina has been born. It is to be the proud privilege of our people to hasten its development. To that end they are already earnestly working.

Galt Reformer—The Ontario Department of Agriculture reports prospects of bumper fruit crops. The cold-storage man and the canner will see to it that the consumer doesn't benefit.

Galt Reporter—Stick to Ontario and Ontario will stick to you. Such a partnership will give every ambitious young man, whether farmer or townsman, the opportunity he desires to become progressively successful in his chosen vocation.

Moose Jaw Times—It isn't even so much a case of what the people stand for, but of what they won't stand for. Beat the Big Interests and give them a beating that will shatter the very foundations of the system which seeks to strangle the people.

Ottawa Journal—It is high time a protest was registered and every effort made to discourage the practice of using profanity and obscene language which ladies and all self-respecting persons are compelled to overhear daily in public streets and elsewhere.

Guelph Mercury—There are many staunch Conservatives who would like to see Sir James follow the stand taken by Mr. Rowell so that they could vote for advanced temperance legislation without having to break with the party to which they have given their support for years.

Vancouver World—The question is if Duchesses undertake the work of evicting suffragettes, there won't be more suffragettes then ever, it would add greatly to the story of one's sufferings for the cause to begin casually, "When her Grace grabbed me by the scruff of the neck," or words to that effect.

Ottawa Free Press—The Canadian manufacturers prefer to pay the duty upon the American calls which have to be imported rather than allow any lessening of the tariff protection which they now possess, so that in reality they are doing a very good piece of business while posing as saviours of the situation in railway construction.

Regina Leader—Regina knows today the terrifying truth of nature's wild power. Flying minutes undid man's work of years. Sorrow, desolation, ruin, bear their testimony to human helplessness when nature allows its fury sway. Strong men take to mind the lesson of Sunday's tragedy. Only to the unthinking and the weaklings does it fail to come.

Ottawa Citizen—The British government has determined to bring in a bill for the taxation of land values. Idle land was untaxed in Britain until two years ago, and even to-day nearly all the taxation on tangible property falls on the buildings. This may suit Sir James Whitney, but the British masses will not tolerate it much longer.

Ancient Theatrical Program.

Theatre programs were known even in ancient times, though they were then of a very peculiar construction. In Greece and Rome they consisted of small tablets, which were handed out to the audience at the entrance. Those occupying the best seats obtained programs beautifully worked in ivory, while those occupying the cheaper seats were given tablets in bronze. The bronze tablets were distinguished by a dove worked in the metal, and the term "piccionerio," used in Italy to-day as designating the lower priced seats in the theatres, dates from this antique custom.

Pay of Surgeon In Ancient Times.

High honorariums were paid surgeons in ancient times. When Darius, the son of Hystaspes, sprained his foot Damocedes was called in, another surgeon of renown having failed to effect a cure. Damocedes was successful, and the king introduced the doctor to the ladies of the court. The ladies filled a vase of gold with money and precious pearls, which a eunuch was ordered to carry to the doctor. The eunuch let fall the vase, and the careful historian tells us that slaves gathered up the pearls.—London Globe.

The Value of Responsibility.

Greater than the value of contact with facts is the value of responsibility. In a man's life it is the arrival of some responsibility which arouses the powers and makes durable the qualities of manliness. The effect of responsibility is instantaneous. It is like a magnet in its power to charge the individual with the faculties needed for the matter in hand. A light is generated among the fragments of information. Even after a systematic education these fragments seem to lie in the mind in a chance order until this light appears and shows them ready for use; then abilities develop which never would develop, even with practice, without responsibility.

No Plumber Needed.

"Hello, hello!" said the lady at the telephone. "Are you Mr. Swipeley, the plumber? Well, the man you sent to fix the leak here has gone away, and the pipe is leaking as badly as ever. What's that? What?"

"What did he say?" asked her husband when she had hung up the receiver and turned toward him with a hopeless look.

"He said the plumber had just returned to the shop and reported that he thought I could stop it if I talked to it."

Where Romance Failed.

"I saw a curious item about that famous author of fairy tales who died a few days ago."

"Yes; I saw that he was dead—a man of extraordinary powers of invention."

"What was the item?"

"Why, it stated that when he happened to be out late with the boys he would go home and stammer and falter and get confused and mixed up and end by telling his wife the whole story just as it happened!"

Inquisitive Dorothy.

Little Dorothy was having her first experience of riding in a sleeper. She was in a lower berth with her mother, and she asked so many questions that she had to be told to keep quiet.

"Just one more, mamma," coaxed the little miss.

"Well, child, what is it?"

"Who has the flat above us?"

He Wants to Live.

"This is the kind of cake my poor husband used to eat."

"What? Take it back! I don't want anyone to be sayin' this is the kind of cake poor Wayside Willie used to eat!"

Lobsters.

"Have you any lobsters to-day?" asked the young housekeeper.

"Yes, ma'am; here's a fresh lot."

"Oh, dear me! I don't want your green ones. Haven't you any that are riper?"

Income Tax In India.

The income tax is levied in India on all annual incomes of $165 and upward, and then only one man in 700 comes within its scope.

Economy in Writing Paper.

At Wallace's Drug Store you can buy the very best linen writing paper for 25c and envelopes to match, 10c for 25. Just the thing for family use.

British masses will not tolerate it much longer.

St. Thomas Journal—Young things are proverbially prodigal of their vitality. Young countries are no exception. The waste of soil in Canada through unscientific farming has been tremendous. The waste of timber through careless forestry represents millions of dollars. The waste of fishery resources for lack of regulation threatens to deplete Canadian fisheries altogether.

Ottawa Citizens—Schools, whether run under the direction of the Roman Catholic Church or any other Church, have no claim to equal consideration with the one public and non-sectarian institution. If certain of our citizens insist upon education having a religious basis, they are quite welcome to do it, but they must pay for it themselves. There can be no wise appropriation made to any kind of sectarian schools. It would mean destruction to our Canadian school system.

Kingston Standard—The effort of certain members of the French Language Congress in Montreal to censure Bishop Fallon for his stand on bilingual schools failed, as well it might. The London prelate has taken a view at once as sane and advanced as it is wise and helpful; and in time the French themselves will come to see that he was their friend, not their enemy. In these days the youth who does not know English is sadly handicapped in his battle through life.

Montreal Herald—It does no good service to scold western papers and people for imparting into their local political disturbance their grievance against "the oppression of eastern interests." There may be occasionally nothing in their complaints directly relevant to the point at issue—as in the present Saskatchewan election—but that only serves to show how real the grievance is in their minds. That present tariff conditions are unjustly favorable to the east and unjustly oppressive to the west is the sharp conviction of nine men out of every ten between the lakes and the coast, and the feeling thus engendered is not good for our national health.

Montreal Star—One fact stands out from this motor car problem very plainly, and that is that, while the horse is naturally a more dangerous citizen of the highway than the automobile, the automobile does more damage. Any motorist will admit that he can stop his car more quickly than a driver can stop his horse. Then, a car does not fling out iron hoofs in front of it when it is stopped. Still, the horse does not kill people like the car. Yet there are ten horses on the streets for every motor. What is the answer? Surely it can only be that the motor is driven more recklessly. When the chauffeur is as careful as the driver, the problem will be solved. And why shouldn't he be?

LISTEN, boys!
What manner of noise
Is that?
Is it the cat
Scratching on a tin pan?
Is it a man
Dropping change into a toy bank?
Is it a tank
Leaking on a tile floor?
Is it the snore
Of a section boss
Or nails rattling across
A sheet of tin?
What is the din
Anyway?

All wrong; your guesses display ignorance.
That noise is the tense,
Nervous fit
Of the dark horse
Champing at his bit.
Once every four years
He hears
The noise of the fray,
Smells smoke far away
And pleads to be entered
At least for place
In the presidential race.
The favorites dance in glee,
Free
As June bugs to come and go
And to show
Their fancy gait.
He must wait
Till the others have had their fling
Before he can get in the ring.
He knows his metal;
He knows his skill
And his ability to fill
The bill,
And, indeed,
He is sure of his speed.
He is in fine trim.
But the race is not for him.
He must patiently chew hay
And wait his day.

Leave It In Repose.

"Don't you think her voice needs training?"

"It does."

"What would you suggest?"

"I think I should train it up the side of the house and tack it there."

Revolutionary.
 "I suppose you will be planting flowers soon, Mrs. Brown?"
 "No; I think not."

"Why, I am surprised. You always have such lovely flowers."
 "I think I shall raise chickens this year!"
 "Why, I thought you hated them."
 "I do, but my neighbor next door is going to plant a garden."
 "But I don't see"—
 "Oh, I'm so mortally tired of hearing his wife brag that her husband never loses his temper."

True Test.

"I am for Congressman Buncome every time."
 "What do you see in him?"
 "He says he can trust the people."
 "Oh, that sounds very well! Any one could trust the people if he were drawing a congressman's salary, but if he really means it let him start a grocery store."

No Tourist.

"When do you leave for Pasadena?"
 "We go to Palm Beach instead."
 "Really? I thought you preferred Pasadena."
 "I do. But, you see, they are advertising special rates out there, and I can't bear to be classed with the cheap Johns."

Foiled.

The driver charged him in advance,
And so he couldn't go.

THE CLOSED DOOR

Its Secret Is Finally Revealed

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The landlord of the Foxboro Inn drew aside the heavy curtain and looked out into the gathering dusk. He dropped the drapery and turned back into the pleasant, fire lit smoking room, where Frank Landis was enjoying an after dinner pipe of tobacco.

"I advise you not to set out tonight, Mr. Landis," warned the landlord as he went back to his chair.

"It's only ten miles to Riverbank. I can make it in half an hour," protested Landis, knocking the ashes from his pipe and placing it in his pocket.

"You don't understand this clay soil, Mr. Landis. I'm apparently trying to retain a very popular guest here overnight; but, on the contrary, I'm actually worried about you."

"Thanks, Smith; I believe you," said the other heartily, "but I've promised to be in Riverbank tonight, and I'm going to try for it if I have to walk part of the way."

"Very well, then. I'll try to make you as comfortable as possible. Do you want Joe to bring your car around?"

"If you please," Landis was shrugging himself into a heavy motorcoat and tying a leather cap over his ears. The storm was plainly audible now. The wind howled dismally, and the rain poured against the windowpanes in a drumming accompaniment.

"I may be making a mistake," he hesitated, sotto voce, "but I promised Robinson I'd get that money to him tonight. No one could have suspected that I started forth with ten thousand in cash in my pockets to help my old friend out of a tight squeeze, so why should I be afraid of a holdup? Brace up, Frank, my lad! I believe this confoundingly comfortable room has softened you against braving the storm. If my reaching there tonight will save Robinson a few hours' worry I'll do it."

Ten minutes later his little runabout moved swiftly down the bluestone driveway from the Foxboro Inn.

The lamplights cut the darkness like a knife. The directions were simple enough. "Straight ahead," Smith had said, and straight ahead the road led between high wooded banks. The trees groaned and creaked as the wind and rain lashed at them; the heavy rain swished against the protecting hood and drowned the noise of the motor.

For a short distance the road was comparatively smooth and hard. Then it grew softer, and the machine labored heavily. Beyond the triangular points of light on the sticky soil ahead of the car all was midnight blackness.

"If I've got to stick fast I hope it will be in front of the halfway house," lurked there at the head of Landis was determined to mystery that had come upon the burning of the car. gulshed the lamp, and, with a revolver ready, he crept silent stairs, alert for a sound from waiting above.

He saw nothing, heard no. As he reached the head of something rushed at him in gloom—something that twined arms about him and tried to him backward down the stairs.

"Let go or I'll shoot!" was his as he struggled with the

There was no reply, only a faint took a fresh hold. He strove to catch at the motorist but the heavy fur coat served a good turn now. He was wriggled out of its folds, while in the man's hands, while he recklessly into the darkness, and into a solid wall, followed to an open doorway and turned room just as the man came lightly after him.

Landis snapped on his high a square room with a close the rear wall. The door into another room, and there was a bar fitted into a socket there. Two windows in the room without glass, and through rain beat relentlessly, and the river was very plain.

Landis saw this in one glance before his assailant in the doorway—a tall, lean man with glaring black eyes and a smile.

"Robinson!" yelled Landis. Why, man, what are you doing? I was on my way to take it to you."

"I know it," laughed the other. "I know it. I've been from Foxboro. I'll take it now—now, Landis! Hand it by heaven you'll never see your house alive!"

Landis stared. Was his friend Robinson was the man going to serve—to lend him for which he had the cash in his

"I'll have it now. I shall be back to Riverbank. I'm from South America, and I need it afresh with. If I make a mistake get it back. If I don't, you bothered with me again."

"You're crazy," said Landis to the other door. "Come, Jim, and forget your worries had a lot of trouble, and I guess pretty nervous. Come and walk back to Riverbank!"

"Never!" yelled the crazed leaping at Landis, who ducked and ran for the closed door.

Robinson was upon him, curved his long fingers around the motorist's neck and choked him half consciousness. Then he sank limply to the floor, and checked his assailant, the other searched his clothing for the cash.

He snatched at Landis' lean, and the fallen man watched helplessly as the robber and saw the thick mass of

Hennequin's Infant Tablets

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she could not live. The Tablets cured her.—MR. E. R. McBRIDE, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—MRS. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would not offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package. Hennequin Tablets have the letter "H" stamped upon them—this is your guarantee. All dealers, 25c per package, or 5 for $1.00 sent postpaid to any address.

points of light on the sticky soil ahead of the car all was midnight blackness. "If I've got to stick fast I hope it will be in front of the halfway house," muttered Landis as the little machine bumped and tottered over the rutty road.

For awhile the way lay smoother, and then again it became impassable. All at once the runabout seemed to sink up to the hubs in mud, grunted helplessly and at last was silent and motionless as Landis shut off the power.

"The devil!" quoth Landis, thrusting his head from beneath the apron and surveying the blackness all about him. "What am I to do?"

He climbed out of the machine and stepped down into the oozy mud. It was over his shoe tops. He detached one of the lamps and threw its white glare into the blackness.

What he saw was far from reassuring. On either side of him tall trees bent their heads to a wild gray sky and a downpour of rain. A little beyond him there seemed a break in the trees, and after turning the light steadily upon it for a few minutes he could discern the ruins of an old house.

There were a broken backed roof and a sagging porch across the front, gaping windows and from somewhere the rushing roar of a river.

"The halfway house!" ejaculated Landis in dismay. "Well, I guess I better tramp back to the Foxboro inn or else spend the night in the car!"

He turned swiftly, suddenly aware that something was happening to the car. There was a strong smell of gasoline and then a roar and upward rush of flames from the stalled machine. The heavy rain partly extinguished the flames as fast as they found new foothold, but there were plenty of protected parts that furnished fuel for the flames.

The glare lighted up the dark roadway, and as Landis stared, for the moment stunned by the unexplained happening, a dark figure appeared on the other side of the car, scrambled and slipped up the embankment and melted into the darkness beyond the circle of flame.

Then was Landis aroused to action. He was about to climb the embankment in pursuit of that mysterious fleeing form when he saw that it had dropped down to the road once more a hundred feet beyond and was crossing rapidly over to the ruined halfway house.

As he looked the flames that enveloped the car were extinguished by the steady downpour of rain, and all was dark again.

"I guess it won't be a dull night if I can lay my hands on that individual!" he muttered as he plunged through the mud toward the halfway house.

Ahead of him other feet hurried toward the house. They were always in advance of him—up the broken steps to the sagging porch—within the creaking door into the mysterious gloom of the deserted house.

Landis hesitated there in the hall. Tiptoeing up the stairs was a man's tall, lean form. Landis only saw his spare back and thin legs clad in black trousers with a loose raincoat flapping about his feet.

As the beam from the pocket lamp shot athwart the wall at his right the man leaped upward out of range of it. Although danger and perhaps death

He snatched at Landis' let, and the fallen man was helpless anger as the rebel and saw the thick mass. Still holding it in his hand, he kicked Landis away from the door, thrust up the bar, door, passed through, and door behind him.

Landis thought he heard yell once after that, but the rain and rush of the river other sounds.

The electric pocket lamp floor, its white glare lighted the boards and throwing the room in deep shadow. There for several hours he aroused himself from the sleep that had resulted from Robinson's tack upon him.

Then the first gray light gave him courage to rouse and investigate. The first thing to open the closed door to his assailant had fled.

As it swung inward Landis a startled cry and stepped

The door opened into a balcony that had once a second story room had fallen when.

Jim Robinson, his false stepped through that doorway.

Landis leaned forth, faltering with apprehension.

There was no sign of Robinson among the rocks. Landis' leather wallet, containing his little fortune.

Hours afterward, when I was in Riverbank with a friend on towing what was left of the runabout, he found the ruins an uproar of excitement.

James Robinson, its prisoner, had fallen, and his body just been washed up on the railroad bridge.

They said it was a clear coincidence, but Landis had seen his friend walk through the darkness of life from death, and he knew the truth.

Many Scandinavians have peculiarly different anatomical features from less hyperborean people. These hardy northerners, under the skin, Panniculus is somewhat seal-like and something like in those of seals, the whale, seal and also the blood vessels in somewhat overdeveloped mammals. All this comes from exposure to the severities of climate. It is no unusual for Norwegians and Swedes in icy cold water for hours without suffering from discomfort.

DUCK DOCTRINE.

When Mrs. Quack does take a notion to hatch she nests on the ground, building the nest of sticks and leaves, and when the lining of downy feathers is finished her laying is done and incubation begins.

The duck, with a wild run and creek to paddle in, generally hides her nest in the reeds and grasses by the water and from every dip returns to sprinkle her eggs with her feathers—a tip to you to wet duck eggs under hens or under artificial incubation.

You seldom see a pure bred duck broody or such a pretty picture as

MRS. DUCK ON THE JOB.

"Mother Duck and Her Darlings," for hatching quacks by machine has nature faked Mrs. Quack out of her job and nearly destroyed the quack's maternal instinct.

It sure is a sight, however, to watch a hundred little rubbernecks push their scoops through the shell and waddle into the world. One New York plant hatched 92,000 quacks last year. That's going some!

They are easy to raise, but the spongy little waddlers must be handled carefully at first, and here's information for the stunt:

Bed brooders with dry sand, keep temperature at 90 degrees first three days, then 85 degrees. At end of week drop to 80 degrees, and gradually taper down until at end of two weeks, if summer, heat may be shut off. Give water first day, and always have water close to feed, as they eat and drink alternately. As ducks do not have

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, July 8.—There was no improvement in the foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat, but there was a fair enquiry for oats for July shipment and some of the bids received were flat on the market here, which, however, exporters would not accept. The local trade in all lines of coarse grains continues quiet and prices are about steady. Manitoba feed wheat is selling in carlots at 67c per bushel, ex-track. The trade in flour for both local and export account is quiet at unchanged prices. Millfeed is in fair demand. Butter is firm with a fair volume of business passing for local and western account. Cheese is quiet, but the undertone to the market is steady. Exports for the past week were 76,869 boxes, as against 88,806 for the same week last year. Eggs, fairly active and steady. Provisions in good demand.

Corn—American No. 2 yellow, 77c.
Oats—Canadian Western, No. 2, 48c to 48 1/2c; extra No. 1 feed, 47c to 47 1/2c.
Flour—Manitoba feed, 64 1/2c to 65c; malting, $1.06 to $1.07.
Flour—Manitoba spring wheat patents, (firsts, $5.80; seconds, $5.30; strong bakers, $5.10; winter patents, choice, $5.40 to $5.50; straight rollers, $4.95 to $5; bags, $2.40 to $2.45.
Rolled oats—Barrels, $4.90; bags, 90 lbs., $2.32 1/2.
Hay—No. 2, per ton, car lots, $18 to $19.

EVERYDAY WONDERS.

WE see the miracle of spring unfold
As of old,
And yet we marvel not Nor say: "Great Scott!
This is some nifty sight!"
We see the new delight
And maybe grunt
Approval because we have been wont
To see it since the morn
When we were born.
And yet
We couldn't get
As grand a show and fair
Anywhere.
Though we might pay a price as high
As the blue roof of the sky.
The grass appears,
From where we do not know.
We watch it grow
As though it were
A thing that might occur
At any time and place.
With matchless grace
Buds open on the trees,
And blossoms swaying on the breeze
Are fine, each one, and grand,
As though a master hand
Had painted them with care
And in such wild profusion
Set them there.
In modest wayside places
The violets show their faces.
The bungler, man,
Might labor for a span.
Of years
With toil and tears
And not a one produce—
In fact, he'd say,
"What's the use?"
Before he made a try.
We ought to stand in awe
And wonder at the law
That guides each springtime blade
But I'm afraid
We don't.

crop like chicken, moist, crumbly mash is in order. After first day feed mash made of four parts bran, one part cornmeal, one part low grade flour, one part rolled oats, three parts fine cut clover, one-half part beef scrap and one part sand.

Keep before them for three days, but do not let it sour. After third day feed four or five times a day on following until eight weeks old: Three parts bran, one part cornmeal, one part low grade flour, one part wheat mids, five parts clover or greens, 10 per cent beef scrap and one part sand.

At eight weeks to fatten feed four parts cornmeal, two parts low grade flour, one part bran, 12 per cent beef scrap and one part greens.

If mash is mixed with milk cut out beef scrap. Soak scrap in cold water, scald bran and clover unless latter is fresh. Keep shell and sand before quacks. Feed what they eat up clean. Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, July 8.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending July 6 were 1400 cattle, 1200 sheep and lambs, 1800 hogs and 1200 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale were 600 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 500 hogs and 400 calves.

Altho the supply of cattle was fully 200 head smaller than a week ago, a weaker feeling prevailed in the market and the prices realized as compared with last Monday's, show a decline of 25c to 50c per cwt. This is attributed to the fact that the quality of the stock now coming forward is generally poorer, consisting principally of grass fed cattle, of which a large percentage are not fully finished for the market.

The gathering of buyers was fairly large, including some from Quebec, but owing to the continued extreme heat and the falling off in the consumption of fresh meats lately, the demand was somewhat limited and chiefly for small lots. However, on the whole, a fair trade was done, and as the offerings were lighter, a good clearance was made at the above reduction in prices. A few full carloads of choice steers were sold to packers at $7.25 to $7.50, and some small lots of extra choice Manitoba hay-fed steers at $8 per cwt., and one load of Ontario choice steers brought $7.75 per cwt., less $1 per head.

In spite of a smaller run of hogs a weaker feeling developed in the market and prices, as compared with last Monday, show a further decline of 10c per cwt. At this reduction the demand was good from packers and a fairly active trade was done with sales of selected lots at $8.40 to $8.55 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for small meats, prices being about steady at the recent decline noted. Supplies of sheep and lambs coming forward are more liberal than they have been for some time past, for which the demand is good at present prices quoted.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.25 to $8; medium, $5 to $6.50; common, $3.50 to $4.50; choice cows, $5.75 to $6; medium, $4.25 to $5.25; bulls, $3 to $5.50; milkers, choice, each, $75 to $80; common and medium, each $50 to $70; springers, $40 to $60.

Sheep—Ewes, $4 to $4.25; bucks and culls, $2.25 to $3.75; lambs, $5 to $5.50.

Hogs—F.o.b., $8.40 to $8.55. Calves—$1.50 to $5.

Hogs—Receipts, 30,000; market easy; early advance lost; light, $7.10 to $7.60; mixed, $7.05 to $7.60; heavy, $6.95 to $7.60; rough, $6.95 to $7.15; pigs, $5.35 to $7.10; bulk of sales, $7.30 to $7.55.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 18,000; market steady to 15c higher; native, $3.25 to $5.40; western, $3.70 to $5.70; yearlings, $4.70 to $6.75. Lambs, native, $4.75 to $8; western, $5 to $9.25.

WHY GERMANS REBEL

REASON FOR THE ENORMOUS SOCIALIST VOTE.

It is Not Because One-Third of the Subjects of the Kaiser Believe In the Doctrines of Karl Marx, But Because They Hate the Way In Which William and His Officers Treat Legislators Like Schoolboys.

At the German election in January, 1912, the Social Democrats polled 4,250,000 votes, or a little more than one-third of all the votes given. How rapidly the German Social Democratic party has increased in strength and power will be seen from the fact that in 1881 the Socialist vote was only 312,000.

In the course of the last three decades the German Social Democratic party has grown from a party of no significance to by far the strongest party in Germany. Why has it grown so rapidly? In 1888 the present Emperor came to the throne. At the general election of 1887, the year preceding his accession, the German Social Democrats were only 763,100 strong. In 1912 they were 4,250,000 strong. Evidently the Social Democratic party has grown so enormously under the rule of the present Emperor and it has become so strong largely owing to the policy which Germany has pursued during the last twenty years. The Emperor himself has descended into the party arena and has attacked the Social Democratic party. In various speeches he had branded the Social Democrats as "a band of fellows not worthy to bear the name of Germans," he has referred to them as "enemies to the divine order of things, without a Fatherland."

It is, of course, ridiculous to describe a party which embraces more than 4,250,000 grown-up men, and considerably more than one-third of the entire population of Germany, as "not worthy to bear the name of Germans" and as "enemies to the divine order of things, without a Fatherland." However, it is equally ridiculous to believe that the 4,250,000 people who gave their votes to Social Democratic candidates would subscribe to the orthodox Socialist doctrines, that they are Socialists at heart. According to the latest official report of the Social Democratic party, it appears that that party had in 1911 only 837,000 members. Of these members, 108,000 were women. If we deduct the number of the women, we find that of the 4,250,000 Social Democratic voters, only 729,000, or about one-sixth of the total number, were avowed Socialists. We may, therefore, perhaps conclude that the bulk of the party, the remaining 3,521,000 men who voted for the Social Democratic party, were not Socialists in reality.

As a matter of fact, enormous numbers of Germans, who belong to all classes of society, such as bankers, merchants, doctors, lawyers, shopkeepers, school teachers, and a very large number of Government officials, such as railwaymen, postmen, and other civil servants, "vote red." They vote Socialist because the Social Democrats are the only party in Germany which determinedly and unceasingly opposes the German Government as at present constituted. It is the only party which fights

HOW TO MAKE A GOOD LAWN.

Select Day When Wind Will Not Blow Seed.

There is surely nothing more beautiful than a fine green lawn and really not so difficult a thing to obtain if gone about in the right way.

The proper way to start is after the lawn has been graded to put in it a top soil of at least six inches and have a gradual sloping grade for drainage, or, if the ground is low and damp, it will be best to lay drain pipes from two to three feet below its surface.

Soil that is rich is very often acid, which can be corrected by applying air slaked lime in sufficient quantity to correct the acidity. With sandy soil the question of fertility is of prime importance, after the grading. The entire area should be covered with well rotted manure. Where this is not possible a chemical fertilizer should be used. After this fertilizer has thoroughly mellowed the soil and a smooth surface has been secured it is then time to sow.

A day should be selected when the wind will not blow the seed. In an ordinary open lawn a good mixture is Pod pratensis mixed with Agnostis acamma. For under the trees where it is difficult to secure any kind of a lawn the ground should be covered with myrtle or hederia ivy. After the seed has been sown the ground should be raked and gone over with a heavy roller until perfectly level.

When the grass is three to four inches high it should be cut with a scythe until strong enough to bear the mower. Should any bare spots appear these must be made mellow and again seeded down.

The best season for making a lawn is immediately after the spring rains and before the heat of the summer tends to dry out the ground.

In the treatment of old lawns that have become poor through a lack of fertility the best and in the end the cheapest thing to do is to plow them up and cover with manure and construct about the same as a new lawn. A lawn requires the use of a heavy roller in the spring after the early rains and again about June and September.

During the summer dry spell, when the lawn is built shallow or with insufficient drainage, it must be watered artificially. Other than the usual cutting with the lawn mowers there is no other care necessary unless it should be covered in December with manure and after the spring rains have washed the nutriment into the soil to have this manure removed.

Woman's Strength.

An observant correspondent has noted the small clasp and the big grasp of the woman. The boatman gives her smaller sculls for her smaller hands, and the gymnasium is fitted with the smaller apparatus for the feminine clasp. But notice the weak woman in the train or tram who has carried and balanced a baby all day for a holiday. As a man could you do it? It's a joke for the man at midnight. But the woman does it without mentioning it. She can carry that baby all day on an arm and think she is holiday making. There is not a man who could do it for twenty minutes without mentioning it.—London Chronicle.

Standardized Statesmen.

This year we pick a congressman. And though we fuss and fret, We're likely to elect the kind That we most always get. Variety in congressmen We very seldom strike, For when we come to size them up They're very much alike.

Some one to go to Washington To send us garden seeds And draw his salary, for he The money always needs; Some one to represent us there When tariff comes to bat If he is not out playing golf When congress votes on that.

We cannot go to Washington The public works to scan And act on our own judgment, And so we send a man. We pick out some good talker And rush him madly through, For that's what takes in congress— It's mostly what they do.

So we must of the candidates Make very careful note, Unless we want to let it go, Just shut our eyes and vote. And that's about as good a way, Perhaps, to play the game, For if we take them up and down They run about the same.

ocrats are the only party in Ger- many which determinedly and un- ceasingly opposes the German Gov- ernment as at present constituted. It is the only party which fights con- tinuously against bureaucratic, and for real Parliamentary Government.

The German people has scarcely any influence over the national leg- islation and administration, because all the higher officials of the empire and of the single states are nominated by the ruler, and they are responsible only to the ruler, who appoints and dismisses them, not to Parliament. If an obnoxious or incapable Secre- tary of State has been appointed by the Emperor, the people and Parlia- ment can do nothing to get rid of him.

The contempt in which the German official classes hold the representa- tives of the people may be seen from the way in which the payment of members of the Reichstag has been arranged. The members of the Reich- stag are entitled to $750 per year. From this sum $5 is deducted for every day on which they have either not attended at all or on which they have not taken part in the division. In order to show that they have at- tended the sitting, they have to sign an attendance-book as if they were office boys in the city.

Although Germany possesses the most democratic franchise in the world, manhood franchise, and al- though plural voting is illegal, Parlia- ment is powerless, because the Government is dependent not upon the goodwill of the people and of the Reichstag majority, but on the good- will of the Emperor. If it should come to a conflict between the Em- peror and the Reichstag, the Emperor can dissolve the Reichstag. A skillful Chancellor will therefore get rid of a democratic Reichstag by raising some imperial or national question, dis- solve the Reichstag, and appeal to the patriotism of the people.

According to the German constitu- tion there ought to be one Reichstag member for every 100,000 of popula- tion. Since the federation of the German Empire the German towns have increased enormously in popu- lation, while the country population has remained stationary. Neverthe- less, no redistribution has taken place, and the result is that there are coun- try districts where 10,000 voters re- turn a member, while there are town districts where 200,000 voters return only one member.

The enormous success of the Social Democratic party is not due to the fact that the Socialist doctrines have taken a strong hold upon the German population. It is not due to the fact that the German masses are poor. It is due to the fact that the German people are tired of being governed "from above" by an army of officials. They are tired of being tricked with the semblance of democratic institu- tions and of a democratic franchise. They wish to govern themselves.

A Chance for Promotion

"Here, my man," said the citizen to the messenger who had delivered his suit of clothes "is a check in payment."

"But," said the messenger, "I am not allowed to collect money."

"I know, but this isn't money."

"Yes," remonstrated the messenger, "but it's the same thing."

"My dear, misguided boy," said the citizen, with tears in his eyes, "your confidence touches me. Leave, I beg you, the employ of this soulless corporation. And if I can persuade the banks of this city that my checks are the same as money your fortune is made!"

The tiny chinchilla, not more than twelve inches long, with a plump lit- tle body on short, stout legs, thrives only in the tropics. The little beasts have to be killed with the utmost pre- caution not to injure their fur, that grows on a skin nearly as tender and soft as a web of silk. A perfect skin not larger than a small pocket hand- kerchief is a revelation in fur growth. The texture of every hair is finer than floss silk, the length of it nearly an inch and the coloring about that of the soft, undyed marabou feathers.

Venom of Rattlers.

One authority on snakes has declar- ed that the venom of the rattler will affect even vegetables. Having inocu- lated various varieties with the point of a lancet, he found them next day withered and dead, looking as if they had been struck by lightning. The Two Sisters

A Story of the Reign of Terror In France

By F. A. MITCHEL

"For heaven's sake, hide me!"

A young man fleeing from the mob during the reign of terror at the time of the French revolution ran into a house where there were several girls, who stood horror stricken at his wild appearance, for they knew well that it meant death by the guillotine if he were caught. The youngest of the girls, but seventeen years old, showed the greatest coolness of all. Taking the young man by the arm, she ran with him upstairs and shoved him into a room, saying:

"You'll find plenty of girls' clothes in the closet. Put them on and hide your own."

She shut the door, and when the pursuing party entered the house she was quietly descending the stairs. A dozen or more persons of the lowest class, armed with all sorts of weapons, from a carving knife to a flintlock musket and with blood in their eyes, came pouring in, demanding the aristocrat who had taken refuge there.

"Ah, messieurs," said the girl descending the staircase, "I fear you are too late. The villain came in her a few moments ago and ran down into the cellar. But I expect he has gone out by a back door. If you don't find him below run quickly along the passage, and I think you will catch him."

While she was giving this false information the pursuers were descending into the cellar and running out through the passageway. But within a few minutes some of them returned and insisted on searching the house. Louise Pellicier, who had thus far kept them from the fugitive, leaving her sisters to talk with the revolutionists, ran up a back stairway to the room in which she had left him. She found him half dressed in woman's clothes and hastily helped him to complete his toilet. Nineteen years old, he had not a sign of a beard, and his features were of the cameo type, delicate and refined. He made up as a girl remarkably well.

Hearing the heavy tread of the searchers on the staircase, Louise again exercised her wits for another scheme to throw them off again. "When they enter here," she said to the young man, "lean out of the window and say: 'There he goes! An aristocrat! Stop him!' Then, throwing one of those white kerchiefs worn by women at that time over his shoulders to complete his toilet, she went to the door and threw it open, facing the crowd. At the same moment the fugitive began to cry out as he had been instructed.

There was a rush for the window, but the young man kept his face outward that it might not be seen by any of his pursuers who would recognize him. All struggled to see, and he could not have well turned to them, even if he desired to do so. Finally he cried, "He's gone behind the shed." By this time most of his pursuers had started on the new trail indicated by him, but one or two were left in the house, and they thought best to do some searching where they were. When they had made a superficial examination they went on after the others. Then the young man, seizing the hand of the girl who had saved him, was about to press it to his lips when the door opened and one of the searchers came back to ask some questions as to the probable route the fugitive had taken. The hunted youth fortunately had dropped Louise's hand and straightened up before the man stepped inside.

"Are you all sisters?" asked the newcomer after having interrogated the young ladies.

"All of us," was the reply.

"I don't doubt it. There is a strong family resemblance between you, especially you two," designating Louise and the fugitive. With that he went away, and they were not disturbed again.

"And now, monsieur," said the oldest sister to the youth, "may I inquire who you are?"

The young man put his finger to his lips and, casting a quick glance about him, said in a low tone:

"Since yesterday, when my father died on the guillotine, I am the Marquis de Lavalette."

There was an awed silence for a few moments, when the oldest sister asked, "What do you propose to do?"

"Make Belgium if possible."

"Then," said Louise, "I would advise you to travel in your present disguise. In that costume no one would ever take you for a man."

"Mademoiselle," said the marquis, "I live by your kindness and ingenuity. The man who has just left us said that there was a family resemblance between us. Travel with me as my sister, giving me the benefit of your remarkable quick inventive power, and I shall be saved. Without it I have but little hope of making my way from this hell's inclosure. The sight of my father torn away from me to be dragged to the guillotine has unmanned me.

I have not the nerve to face the dangers I shall meet on the "Monsieur," said the eldest reproachfully, "what do you my sister should travel I am astonished. You know would cast a stigma upon which she would never receive. "Mademoiselle," replied "my life belongs to your without her efforts I was dragged back to prison and guillotine. If she will go to a priest and then assist I will go beyond the border I promise my future life to her she succeeds in saving it."

All looked to Louise to reply. When it came she spoke certain tones:

"I will go with you as you Louise!" exclaimed the in horror.

"I know myself," said Louise am responsible only to my God. Tonight we will I cannot permit you to in the sight of the world," protested. "I beg of you to first visit a priest."

"No," said Louise firmly, take a husband who would for the purpose of saving her. She was immovable. Neither nor the young marquis to persuade her.

"Then," said the latter, "cross the border I will renounce."

"That will not remove it before the world, but for the not. Come, let us lay our plan."

The Marquis de Lavalette desired to see his father in visited him there disguised as a man. He was with his father the latter was taken away to time.

By the son's paroxysm it was suspected that he than a servant to the man executed. As he was more from the prison insensible grief some one beside him said "Run for your life." Cast backward, he knew that he sued. In his flight, seeing he had entered and begged found there to hide him.

That night, with nothing clothes they had on and in their pockets, the two, the house, turned into a street northward and crossed the Revolution, now the Place corde. In its center, where a obelisk now stands, stood Louise and Louise felt hand tremble on her arm as ed toward it. Passing over they hailed a cab—the first met—and ordered the coach drive them to the barrier. were inspected, but since there to be no reason for deta

Passing over the Seine, a cab—the first they had ored the coachman to o the barrier. There they ed, but since there seemed ason for detaining them they were permitted to go through. Then the "sisters" offered the coachman a goodly sum to drive them to Chantilly. It was late, but the cabman was tempted and consented.

They reached Chantilly in the morning, and since it was on a direct line between Paris and the Belgian line—the nearest route by which the emigres could flee to a foreign country—they felt that they were objects of suspicion.

There were interrogated by an agent of the revolutionary committee, but Louise, who was an excellent actress, whose resources were unlimited and whose nerve nothing could shake, declared with tears in her eyes that their mother was dying in St. Quentin and they were trying to reach her to receive her blessing before she died.

So they were permitted to hire another conveyance, which took them to St. Quentin. Before entering the town, which they reached late in the afternoon, Louise, thinking it best not to submit themselves to another such scrutiny as they had been subjected to at Chantilly, fearing also that some one might be spying upon them to learn if the dying mother story were true, decided that they would better leave their carriage and steal around the town without entering it. So they called a halt, paid for the use of the vehicle and trudged on afoot.

Reaching a peasant's hut just after nightfall, Louise knocked at the door and told a pitiful story of having walked out from St. Quentin to hunt for flowers and got lost, asking food and lodging for the night. There was but one room, so the marquis, feigning to be cold, insisted on sleeping by the great open fire which blazed merrily.

The next day but twenty miles remained to the nearest point of the Franco-Belgian line, and the fugitives resolved to make it, getting a lift from some conveyance going the same way when possible. They walked more than half the distance and crossed the line at an unfrequented point, exhausted, but greatly relieved. The moment they were assured that they were on Belgian territory both knelt and gave thanks for their safety.

"And now," said the marquis, "I renew the offer I made in Paris, not as an offer, but as a prayer—that I may devote the life which belongs to you to your service."

"I am one of the people," replied the girl. "You are noble."

"My nobility is gone. I shall never claim it. I shall go to America, to New Orleans, where so many of my friends have gone, leaving my title behind me. Come with me, I beseech you, that I may repay what I owe you with a lifetime of love and gratitude."

There is a house still standing at Carrolton, a short distance above New Orleans, where lived the marquis and his wife, though not as nobles. When Louis XVIII was restored to the throne of France he invited them to return, but neither the husband nor the wife had any desire to do so. They died in the Crescent City beloved and respected by all who knew them and leaving a large number of children and grandchildren. The marquis kept his word as to his title and never used it.

Farm Dairying

Holstein Calf

V.—Care of the Calf.

By LAURA ROSE,

Demonstrator and Lecturer in Dairying at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

[Copyright, 1911, by A. C. McClurg & Co.]

THERE is a difference of opinion among farmers as to letting the calf suck the dam at all. Some take it away immediately, but the greater number leave the calf with its mother at least twenty-four hours after it is born. It is always safer to allow it to stay that length of time unless the cow is known to be tuberculous, in which case the calf should be removed right away and not allowed to be licked by its mother or to drink any of her milk. Tuberculosis is not hereditary, but may be contracted.

To teach a calf to drink let it get quite hungry first, then insert two fingers in its mouth and lower its head into the pail. Calf feeders can be bought and are liked by some. If the calf proves obstinate—and depend upon it some surely will—the milk will cool while your patience is being tried. It must be heated by adding a little hot water to it, for the young baby must not get cold milk, even when it is obstinate. Remember it is against nature for a young calf to put its head down to drink, so while it is learning this we must be patient. It will help matters at first to raise the pail, or better still, a dish, to the calf, if possible. Never feed in wooden pails. They soon sour. Always wash and scald the pails at least once a day. It takes less time than to bother with sick calves.

As a rule, it is a good plan to feed the calf whole milk for the first three weeks, though there are many strong ones which would stand the change to skim milk at two weeks. At first give from six to eight pounds (two and one-half to three and one-half quarts), according to the size of the calf, twice daily. At the end of three weeks it should get from eight to ten pounds.

In the event of a calf from any cause not getting the colostrum (first milk), which is very laxative and intended by nature to cleanse the bowels of the young animal, it is advisable to feed it with the milk from the freshest, lowest testing cow you have, at the one pint of whole flaxseed to four quarts of water, add a little salt, soak overnight and boil for an hour next morning. Some put into the milk a little of the oatmeal porridge made for breakfast.

Good calves have been reared on hay tea. Good, bright clover hay is put through a cutting box and cut fine, three pounds per day allowed for a six-weeks-old calf. It is then well boiled, strained and a quarter of a pound each of ground flaxseed and wheat middlings added for each calf. It is again boiled and fed at a temperature of 90 degrees. This makes a nourishing, easily digested food. The older cattle relish the steeped hay.

A successful dairyman, who sends his milk all off the farm, uses the following mixture to make a thin gruel, a substitute for milk: One hundred pounds ground flake, 100 pounds low grade flour, twenty-five pounds ground flaxseed.

In raising calves it is very unwise to pour the milk into a trough and let them all drink together.

Calves should not be exposed to extremes in weather and are better to be housed most of the time for at least the first six months of their lives.

The calf's skin is tender and may blister and become very sore if exposed to the hot sun. A nice clean grass paddock develops the muscles and keeps them in general good health. When calves sweat badly there is probably bad ventilation in the stable. Give them plenty of fresh air, even though it be cold.

The pen must be frequently cleaned out, be kept dry and have plenty of litter or the calves will not thrive and are sure to get some of the many troubles which attack young stock. It

Scours—or Diarrhea.

The most frequent trouble in raising a calf on skim milk is scouring. The reason of this in nearly all cases is indigestion, due to one or more of the following preventable causes: Too much milk; sour milk when the calf

They say the hayseed is no more—
The man who graced the comic stage
With whiskers like a shaving brush
And tossed off jokes that were of age.
He ably served his day and is
No longer working at his trade.
The reaper cut his whiskers down,
And now his clothes are tailor made.

He was a dandy in his day.
He chewed and spit and said "By heck!"
And tucked his whiskers in his shirt
Or wrapped them twice about his neck,
And as he slowly wandered out
Behind the lights you had a thrill
And said as he began to act,
"For all the world—it's Uncle Bill!"

But evolution caught him up
And ran him gayly through the mill,
Reclothed him in the latest style
And sent him, you can bet, the bill.
He's bought himself a motorcar,
And should he in among you drop
You couldn't tell him from the man
Who runs a Wall street broker shop.

Yes, he is gone, that grand old man,
The farmer of the comic page,
Who as the butt of ancient jokes
Was one time very much the rage.
He has departed, boots and hat,
And something from our life is missed.
Oh, we feel very sure he's gone, nature to cleanse the bowels of the young animal, it is advisable to feed

it with the milk from the freshest, lowest testing cow you have, at the same time watching carefully to see if the bowels are acting. If not give about two tablespoonfuls of warm raw linseed oil or castor oil, repeating the dose if necessary.

Jersey milk is often too rich in fat for the calf to do well on it. Such milk should be diluted with water. Or give the calf milk from another fresh cow of low test if you have one.

"In feeding calves by hand," said an expert stock raiser to me, "I would never be without a thermometer and some means of weighing the milk, as I would far rather let a calf go without a meal than have it get a couple of pounds too much milk or have it get it at a temperature of 70 degrees if it had been used to getting it at 60 degrees, which is about right."

When heating milk for calves it is best to place the vessel containing it in a pan of hot water; then there is no danger of its being burned or boiled.
One great advantage of separator skim-milk is that if fed immediately it is at the right temperature and is fresh and sweet. Besides, I think the animal heat in the milk has a certain vitality in it.
The froth should be removed. It is not good for the calf, sometimes causing colic.

In changing from whole milk to skim-milk do not be in too great a hurry.
Take at least a week to make the change.

At two or three weeks the calf will begin to eat a little hay and should be provided with some nice, bright clover hay. It should also get a little meal about this time. A good plan is to fill the band with bran and crushed oats, and when the calf has finished its milk held your fingers for it to suck, and while it is doing so work the meal, a little at a time, into its mouth with your thumb. Another plan is to put a little meal into the bottom of the pail just as it has finished drinking. Some give it a few whole oats. The chewing and mixing of the food with saliva promote digestion and thrift. A little pulped roots is relished by the calf and tends to keep the appetite keen. If you wish to fatten a calf give it some fat producing food, such as a little cornmeal.

A calf of two months should not get over eight quarts of milk per day;
at four months it cannot make good use of more than ten quarts. With this it should get two quarts of mixed crushed grain per day and all the hay
it can eat.

At six months the milk allowance may be dropped out, or before that time if milk is scarce. Weaning the calf from milk should be slowly done by substituting water gradually.
Calves should have fresh, clean water to drink from babyhood to maturity.

Do not forget the supply of salt for the calves. Occasionally put a lump of fresh sod in the calf pen. The calves seem to enjoy a taste of earth.

It is always well to substitute something to replace the fat taken from skimmilk fed to calves. When making the change from whole milk a tablespoonful of ground oilcake may be added to the milk. If flaxseed is used, and there is nothing better, it should be well boiled and from a half cupful to a cupful of the jelly added to the warm milk. To make the jelly take reason of this in nearly all cases is indigestion, due to one or more of the following preventable causes: Too much milk; sour milk when the calf has been used to sweet; changing from whole to skimmilk too suddenly; irregular hours of feeding, dirty feeding pails and dirty wet bedding. The disease frequently begins with constipation, which soon gives way to diarrhea.

Should the calf begin to scour at any time give it just about half its usual ration for a feed or two and two tablespoonfuls of raw linseed oil or castor oil. Some add twenty drops of laudanum. When the scouring has stopped, gradually increase the feed until the calf is getting its regular allowance.

There are several remedies for scours
recommended by different authorities.
Of these the most popular seem to be raw eggs, flour, limewater, black tea and blood meal. The latter is highly recommended as a calf feed. About a teaspoonful in the milk is said to be a cure for scours and if fed regularly is a preventive.

The first year—when she is a calf—is the most important in a cow's life.
Stunt the calf and it can never develop into the profitable cow which good care and thrifty growth would have produced. It is true that the cow is partly born and partly made. Our aim should be to train the calf to make use of coarse foods.

Dehorning.

Where a large number of cows run together it is probably the safest and best plan to have them dehorned, though it certainly detracts from their appearance. The best time to dehorn is in calfhood. Calves may be easily dehorned when a few days old. Clip the hair where the rudimentary horns appear and with a moistened stick of caustic potash rub the little buttons of horn until the skin becomes inflamed and tender to the touch. One application is usually sufficient. As caustic potash burns, be careful not to get it on the hands or on the calf's head.

Most any girl would like to have a house of her own, but she is often hard to suit as to the sort of man she wants to put in it.

Getting what you want isn't half so hard as to keep right on wanting it after you get it.

A girl's idea of improving her mind is to read a historical novel while she masticates a plate of fudge.

Some men's idea of keeping a good resolution is putting it away and never thinking any more about it.

campaign, with elections only two days away, has reached the final stages. The leaders, the candidates and the papers are making their last appeals to the electorate.

Saskatchewan has had bitter campaigns, but none ever to equal the present fight. It is a desperate struggle for the control of the province.

It is becoming more than that. It is being generally represented as a federal fight for the west. As Saskatchewan goes, so will Alberta, is the general feeling. Alberta politicians evidently think so, as both sides have many speakers and workers in the province. Hon. Duncan Marshall, Hon. C. W. Cross, Hon. A. G. MacKay, and Hon. Frank Oliver are here for the Liberals. R. B. Bennett, M.P., has been speaking in Saskatoon and a number of Conservative speakers from Edmonton are stumping the north country. The issues are becoming more and more federal, largely forced by Premier Scott's adoption of "wider markets" as his main election cry. The Conservatives are countering by pointing out what the Borden Government is doing and is prepared to do to meet the grievances of the western farmers.

In cities the fights are largely local. In Prince Albert the Hudson Bay Railway and the development of the north are the main issues, both sides claiming candidates for these policies, while in Saskatoon both sides are making lavish promises of what they will do for the country.

The fight is growing more bitter daily and both sides are talking of wholesale arrests on election day. There promises to be a great deal of trouble over the election districts. This is the first time Saskatchewan has ever had printed lists. The Conservatives charge that hundreds of their votes have been left off the lists. The Liberals claim that they are as badly off in this respect as the Conservatives. Irrespective of politics, it is certain that many old settlers will not have votes this election. Through the country it is not understood that a man can no longer swear on his vote, and it is feared there may be serious trouble at the booths.

At one polling place in Gull Lake fifteen ranchers have been left off the lists. They say that if they are not allowed to vote there will be no election in that poll.

Premier Scott yesterday addressed an appeal to the electors of Saskatchewan in which he declares that the Haultain party has failed to utter a syllable of criticism of the Government's policy.

After disclaiming any intention of retiring, the Premier accuses his opponents of saying that if his Government is returned, Premier Borden will not fulfil his promise to transfer the national resources to the province. He terms this "the most brazen and unblushing attempt at the coercion of a free province, ever witnessed in Canada."

"Even more important than wider markets is provincial independence? Independence is the matter of the preservation of our electoral integrity. Never in any provincial election contest was any province overrun with such a horde of election crooks as are overrunning Saskatchewan at the present moment."

Bathing and Canoeing Exact a Heavy Toll.

Two Young Men Lose Their Lives While Swimming In Toronto, and a Resident of That City Perishes In Muskoka—Two Fatalities Occur at Montreal, Three at Quebec and One Is Reported at Ottawa.

Toronto, July 8.—Edward Irwin, 123 Bond street, a young man, about 19 years of age, was drowned while bathing in the Don River near the Winchester street bridge last night at about nine o'clock. The part of the river in which young Irwin and a number of other young men were bathing is very treacherous. There are many deep holes near the banks at this point, and it was into one of these that Irwin suddenly dropped. He could not swim. It was some time before his comrades noticed his disappearance. When they became aware of the fact that he was not among them they became alarmed and dived and otherwise tried to locate him. He evidently did not come to the surface at all after going down the first time, for neither cries for help nor splashing of the water gave his friends any intimation that he was drowning.

Albert Adams of Mount Dennis was drowned yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock while bathing in the Humber river near Humberville. He and Thomas Cross, his brother-in-law had been bathing for nearly half-an-hour in the pond by the International Electric Light Co.'s power house, when Adams who was wading in shallow water suddenly disappeared in a deep hole not many yards from the bank. Neither he nor Cross could swim and his brother-in-law was almost drowned in his efforts to save him. The body was recovered about half-an-hour later by the employees of the Interurban Company and Dr. MacNamara of Davenport road summoned but all attempts at resuscitation were in vain. The remains were taken to the King Edward Sanatorium at Weston where Coroner Charlton of that village, after viewing the body decided an inquest to be unnecessary last night.

The young man lived with his mother and married sister on Baylis avenue, Mount Dennis and arrived only recently from his home in England.

Toronto Man Drowned.

Toronto, July 9.—John Campbell, 24 years of age, of 349 Westmoreland avenue, was drowned while bathing in Lake Muskoka last Saturday afternoon. He was employed as chef on the C.P.R. Muskoka train. DOHERTY BEFORE COUNCIL.

British Tribunal Will Hear Marriage Case.

London, July 9.—Before the Privy Council yesterday, Hon. C. J. Doherty, Canada's Minister of Justice, asked special leave to appeal in the stated marriage case. Mr. Doherty recited minutely the various steps leading to the application. The subject matter, he said, had given rise to a very considerable agitation. A good deal of strange feeling had been generated over the fact that the validity of marriages, at all events of those between Roman Catholics and Protestants, was dependent upon the ceremony performed before the Roman Catholic Church. Certain portions of the population recorded this as constituting a very serious evil.

The Government of Canada simply felt that in view of the importance of the matters involved, and the general desire that they should be settled by the judgment of the highest tribunal of the realm, it was incumbent on them to apply to their lordships for leave to appeal.

Lord Haldane, the Chancellor: "Their lordships consider it a most proper case. Obviously it is of very great constitutional importance. I understand you desire a special sitting?"

Mr. Doherty: "We have a very earnest desire that the case be heard this summer."

Lord Haldane: "In that case their lordships will endeavor to make special arrangements."

Mr. Doherty said the Canadian Government had provided for arguments on both sides.

It was decided to take the case, if possible, on the 22nd inst.

PROSTRATIONS REPORTED.

Yesterday's Heat Severe In Many Canadian Cities.

Toronto, July 9.—Ninety-two in the shade and many degrees over the 100 notch in the sun, was the hottest yesterday here, and four prostrations resulted.

All of these men stayed in the hospital over night, and at a late hour were reported to be doing well.

But the heat in Ontario was not nearly as intense as that in Nova Scotia. In Chatham, N.S., the thermometer registered 93 above at one time, and Halifax experienced 96 degrees. In Montreal and Quebec City, the hottest was 92, similar to our own spell.

There's a chance that it will get cooler here within a few days, but such is not promised immediately. In the west it is much cooler, with light showers in the south, and heavy ones in the northern portions of the prairies.

Record Heat at Ottawa.

Ottawa, July 9.—According to an announcement by Prof. Ellis, observer at the experimental farm here, the last six days—from 92 to 95—have constituted a record of continuous excessive heat, eclipsing anything ex-

"Fruit-a-tives" Makes Wonderful Cure

N. C. STIRLING, Esq.

GLENCOR, ONT., Aug. 15th, 1911.

"So much has been said and written about 'Fruit-a-tives' that it might seem unnecessary for me to add my experience.

But 'Fruit-a-tives' were so beneficial to me when I suffered with distressing Dyspepsia, that I feel called upon to inform you of the remarkable and satisfactory results I have had from using them.

Dyspepsia and Indigestion as everyone knows, can give you more uncomfortable hours and days than most common complaints.

"I am glad to be able to say to you that although in the past I suffered excruciating agony with Dyspepsia, I am now in perfect health.

"Fruit-a-tives" accomplished the desired result and I have to thank them for my very favorable and satisfactory state of health"

N. C. STIRLING.

Lake Ocean Travel Safe.

July 9.—A conference for the purpose of measures of safety in sailing vessels is to be held in the autumn. Both the United States and Germany, which first initiative in the matter, waived their claims. The proposals to be presented to the conference will be drafted finally, the holding of another conference shortly before the end of the international conference in London.

Japanese Pottery.

Anybody who knows anything at all about Japanese pottery knows that such a thing as Satsuma ware. The fact that it is yellowish in color, always crackled, knowledge of the pottery is taken from the fact which comes from the pro-Satsuma and is the only clay used in the world, which is the number of firings in the elaborate decorations it is the subject.

Effect of Green Apples.

A certain swain was doing his "pop" the question. She repudiated him off by changing the subject and thus broke in upon his "Oh, listen to that apple tree as it sighs and groans!" "A cross by this time and red, and if you were as full of apples as that tree is you'd be dead long ago."

A Witty Abbot.

A I. of France, being desirous of a learned man to the highest of the church, asked him if of noble descent. "Your man answered the abbot, "there are no brothers in Noah's ark, but I tell positively from which I descended." The witty abbot declined the appointment.

Though their companions rowed round the place for several hours no signs of the men were seen. It is thought that they were pulled down by the dangerous undercurrents which exist at this point.

Both men resided in Montreal.

Three Drowned at Quebec.

Quebec, July 9.—A young man named Rousseau was drowned at Lotbiniere wharf. Daniel McDermott, a sailor on the steamer Crown of Canada, was drowned in the Louise basin, and Albert Gauvin was drowned at Lorette Sunday. All were bathing.

Seized With Cramps.

Ottawa, July 9.—Louis Frappier, aged 16, of Hull, sought refuge from the fierce blasts of the sun in the Ottawa river and was seized with cramps and drowned before assistance could reach him. The body was recovered.

Crazed With Heat.

Windsor, July 9.—Half-crazed with the intense heat and suffering from neuralgia, William Mickle, aged 40, a prosperous farmer residing near Amherstburg in Malde Township, committed suicide by hanging Sunday. When his mother missed Mickle from the house after an absence of several hours, she set out in search of him, and was horrified to discover the lifeless body dangling from the end of a strap attached to the rafters in a tool shed some distance from the farm house.

Mr. Mickle leaves a widow and three children. Coroner Pike, who was called, decided an inquest was unnecessary.

Prepares for Royalty.

Winnipeg, July 9.—Preparations are actively in progress all over the city, but particularly on Main street and on Portage avenue, for the arrival of the royal visitors to-night.

The duke's party reach the city at 8.30 p.m., and at the Canadian Pacific Railway station they will be met by members of the reception committee, the guard of honor and escort being furnished by the militia, under Col. Steele, district commanding officer.

From the station the Governor-General and party will drive to the City Hall.

Cannot Agree on Chairman.

Washington, July 9.—The selection of a chairman for the Republican national committee was last night still in the air.

For four hours yesterday afternoon, President Taft, his secretary, Charles D. Hilles, and a sub-committee of the Republican national committee discussed the question of the chairmanship. At 5.30 o'clock last night they adjourned until to-day, no nearer a choice than they were when they met.

Resolution of Condolence.

Napanee, July 6th, 1912.
The last meeting of the Board of Directors of the Lennox and Addington Fire Insurance Company, was held on the above date, when the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Moved by Ira B. Hudgins, seconded by Robert Longmore, that we, the members of the Lennox and Addington Fire Insurance Company, in session assembled, hereby place ourselves on record in an expression of the high esteem in which our late lamented Bro. Thomas Ashton Amey, was held by this company, and our deep sense of the great loss we have sustained by his sad decease; and also wish hereby to convey to his sorrowing wife and family our most profound sympathy in this the time of their sad trial and great affliction and join in earnest prayer that the God of all consolation may sustain them by his grace.

AN UNBREAKABLE WILL AT LAST.

Here's a Will that Cannot be Disputed.

When a piece of machinery is so strong and simple that it cannot go wrong, it is often called "foolproof." The same thing might be said of the Bax Will Form but for the fact that a fool never makes a will, and he is the only man who does not.

Every man or woman of intelligence realizes the importance of making a will, even when the amount to be left is small. Some people, however, delay the matter because they do not wish to incur the expense of lawyer's fees or wish to avoid publicity. It is to these people that the Bax Will Form appeals. It costs only 35 cents, and there is no necessity for letting any person else know the contents of the will. With each form there is a specimen will made out correctly, with full instructions for your guidance.

The will made on the Bax Will Form is positively legal and indisputable. See that name "BAX" appears on the form.

For sale by all druggists and stationers at 35 cents, or sent on receipt of price by the Bax Will Form Company, 280 College Street, Toronto. For sale by A. E. Paul, Napanee.

Q. R., and arrangements are being made to have the Picton Band run an excursion from Picton. There will be lots of good music around Napanee on the 14th. Some of the bands that will be here that day will be, Lindsay, Port Hope, Trenton, Deseronto, Picton, Tweed, Enterprise, Napanee and others. The sports in the Park will include, besides the usual Firemen's event, horse races, base ball games, foot races from 100 yards up to one mile, etc. The boys are also hunting for other attractions and are going to make the 14th a banner day in the history of Napanee.

Royal Templars of Temperance Organized.

Pursuant to announcement a number of young people met in the Sunday School room of the Western Methodist Church on Tuesday evening for organization for aggressive temperance work. The meeting was opened by singing the hymns, "Rescue the Perishing" and "Throw out the Life Line," and prayer by Rev. S. Sellery and Mrs. Johnson. Short addresses were given by Rev. J. P. Wilson, Rev. S. Sellery, Captain Johnson, Dr. Simpson and F. W. Barrett. Mr. E. Skitch, who has been in town working in the interest of the order, said a few words commending the society and the good work that had been accomplished through its agency and stated that he had secured fifty names in town and vicinity, many of whom were present, and were ready to unite with the order in its work of uplift and salvation. The organization of the society was then proceeded with, all present taking the obligation. The Council will be known as Napanee Council, No. 464. on a rich brown color by soaking up the oil of tobacco was discovered by accident. It is said that a cobbler named Koneatch, who lived at Budapest in the middle of the seventeenth century, was mending a pipe for Count Andrassy when he dropped the bowl on a piece of wax he was using for waxing his thread. He wiped off the wax, but later, when the owner was smoking the pipe, a beautiful dark spot appeared where it had been touched by the wax.

The Roman Forum.

There were many forums in Rome, but the oldest and most famous was not created like a building at a certain time. The Forum Romanum was originally the lowlands between the Palatine, Capitoline and Quirinal hills, used as a meeting place for barter and politics by the tribes living on the hills named and on other hills near by. The development of this crude trading place and neutral ground into the Roman forum of later times was very gradual and irregular.

Ghost Story In Court.

In the course of an application for the presumption of the death of Archibald Scott, heard in Dumfries Sheriff's Court, evidence of a strange vision was given. Archibald Scott went to Australia in 1851, during the gold rush, and was lost sight of. Mrs.
Jane Debenham said that the missing man was her father. All efforts to trace him in Australia had failed. His eldest sister, Sybella, many years ago told her that she was taking a walk with her father one summer evening, and along the path, coming towards them, she saw her brother Archibald dressed in the same check suit which he used to wear. She was a little behind her father, and in passing the figure never spoke, and she turned round to look and make sure. The figure also turned in passing, and then disappeared. She was certain her brother Archibald had died at the very hour she had seen the vision. The presumption of death was declared.

A Breach of Etiquette.

"Am I to understand that you were discharged from the army for a mere breach of etiquette?" queried the interested friend.

"Yes, sir," boldly asserted Colonel Blupher.

"What was it?"

"Turning my back to the enemy."

Away He Went.

"Madam, I'm traveling around the world on a wager. I have to make good time or I lose my bet."

"Well, I don't mind letting my bulldog pace you a couple of miles. Here, Tige."
